second-class matter.

We have been asked several times of late to publish the names of the streets with the reason why they are so named. We comply very readily, although the information has been before published.

The original town,-built upon a narrow hill, with the Potomac river on one side and a marsh on the other—was laid off in 1749 with but two streets—Fairfax and Royal—running north and south. The nomenclature of the old town was thus intended to do honor to the royal family and the families of Thomas, Lord Fairfax, Baron of Cameron, within whose territory the town was laid out. These two streets-Royal and Fairfax-were crossed by a central street called Cameron street, after the title of Lord Fairfax, flanked on the one side by the ti-tles of the male members of the royal family -King, Prince and Duke; and on the other by the titles of the royal females-Queen, Princess and Duchess streets. The fact that a stream which the Indians called Oro no-ko creek ran along a portion of the streets which ought to have been called Duchess, led, upon making the plat of the town to naming the street after the water which flowed through its lower portion. The town grew and was enlarged in 1763 by the addition of one street to the west, which was named Pitt street in honor of Lord Chatham, while another street, added on the south at the same time, was called after Gen. Wolfe, the popular hero of the day, before whose army Quebec had fallen. The next enlarge-ment, about the time of the Revolution, gave us St. Asaph street which our fathers named after John Halifax, Bishop of St. Asaph, in Wales, a trenchant writer in favor of the liberties of Virginia; and also one street south, which was christened after the deter-mined Whig editor of the North Briton newspaper, George Wilkes All the otherstreets were named during or after the Revolution, and we will recapitulate and take them in their order, starting first from the strand, as the riverside is called.

Union was named because it was laid out in 1783 when the feeling in favor of uniting the country was strong among our fathers. A curve of the river until that time had occupied with its waters the site of the street. Water-1783-named because, when the town was laid out, the river came up to the foot of the hill which sloped from Fairfax street to the water's edge. | This street has been renamed Lee in honor of Gen. R. E.
